

The Door

Words and music by Jenica Rayne © 1999 what's the difference between black and white?

there ain't no difference
i don't wanna fight
you've spent your whole life in the mirror searching for your perfect disguise
dreaming of others what happened to your life?

ah you lost that precious thought the one you carried the one i married cause we've been holding on to what would happen if?
the door opened and we walked out of this breaks my heart to feel this change the truth is what remains warmer days and sunshine

fill the air with our regrets the door sits wide open i'll walk through first i guess cause we were already over we were already there

you've been afraid
you lived in vain ah you couldn't see the true beauty queen there were times i saw you surface the child from within your shell of coated armor it's heavy but thin

so what's the difference between black and white?
it's too late to fight we've been talking with conviction we've been holding onto the chain we were waiting for tomorrow but it never came
